

Article 351: A Cosmic Journeyer- part 1

The universe, being infinitely sequential, provides a low level of sequential-motion and things which is essentially limitless ...or not determined~even material “stuff” is not determined~but not being determined does not mean that the universe is random, accidental, chaotic, unintentional, disordered or disorganized, unsystematic, haphazard, or irregular. The universe has no meaning, purpose, or promise because everything in the universe is its own meaning•purpose•promise. The universe is not designed ...but not undesigned either, ...and it is not caused ...but not unintentional.

Is it at all possible for you to conceive of the universe as a lump of clay on a potter’s wheel ready for active minding, or ready for the potter’s hands, to motion it ...and form it? Does that make any sense to you? Can you understand the universe being deliberate or created with intent ...yet without any object or purpose in mind? If the potter makes a vase from the clay, you cannot rightfully declare that the purpose of clay is to become-vases, yet such vases are inherent in clay as essential qualities, promises, constituents, and characteristics of clay waiting for the potter to give them form; ...and the meaning and promise of and for the vase are also inherent in clay.

If you understand these things, then, instead of trying to discover how the universe is designed ...and how it works ...and why? ...are you, somewhat like a potter forming clay, willing to show the universe, through active minding, what the universe can be? If your actions or doings are intentional or purposeful, you are attempting to create results for yourself ...or maybe for others or the universe, but your desire for results limits and confines you and others ...and the universe, ...what is to be gained by that? To expand and strengthen your self and life, you need a definite and greater universal-image of your self ...and your past.

Just as the potter showed clay what it could be, are you willing to show others what they can be? ...and show the universe what it can be? If so, what do you suppose that would reveal about you? ...and what might that look like? ...and what would you do?

Why were you born? ...or why do you suppose you were born? To begin, do you see that being born is the only way the sequential-universe has of creating or particularizing you without intentionally causing you? Being born also enables you to be an active “part of” the universe ...with all of the advantages of the universe, so you can live or particularize as you truly desire without limiting or jeopardizing yourself or life ...or the universe.

You were also born so you could actively create and shape the self and events and fulfillment you truly desire ...without interfering with others ...or struggling against the universe.

Are you willing to be an active participant in and observer of your self and life ...and the universe from the inside ...instead of struggling to alter matters from the outside? Haven't you always wanted to be "an insider"?

Are you willing to free yourself from language? ...or from the limiting and confining structure of language ...and become a peregrinator? You're probably thinking, "Maybe, ...but I don't know what a peregrinator is! Before answering that, you must consider this next statement carefully ...and without any doubt.

Everything in life can be lost or taken from you ...except one thing, ...and that one thing is who you are.

Without thinking spiritual/physical, aliens, other dimensions or space travelers, can you imagine yourself as a man or woman of the universe? ...who was born into life for a purpose? Do you remember quantum mechanics' claim that any observer not only affects what is observed ...but the observer determines what is observed? ...and have you ever thought about how this might apply to you? Have you ever considered the possibility that you were born in the universe so you could be an active participant and observer from the inside ...so as not to determine matters ...and screw it all up for everyone else? Can you imagine yourself as a peregrine voyager? ...there's that word again, so we might as well discuss that.

Peregrinate (as in peregrine falcon) means to journey or travel in foreign lands, ...are you willing to conceive of yourself being born into life as a peregrinator? ...and that as a peregrinator you have a promise or purpose to live? ...or is that just too much for you to consider? ...but wouldn't this give you a very real past before birth? ...and make your life real?

Peregrinate also means to have the air of one who has traveled or lived abroad. Such as an air of confidence would infill you ...and surround your self and life with assurance, and end undesirable emotions, ...can you see yourself in this way? ...and live this attitude of self? If so, traveling and living abroad ...outside of your language is the first step in recognizing and acknowledging your promiseself, which you will find important in your life because peregrination also means "uneven ramblings" ...which will continue in your self and emotions until you acknowledge who and what you really are.

As a peregrinator, you are a pilgrim ...a traveler from beyond this language, ...actually, from beyond the earth ...and then some. Are you willing to believe the impossible? Do you understand this? ...or is this much too weird for you? ...and if you do understand, can you really sense these things in your body and life? ...and if you did sense these things, would this give you a past before birth? ...a real past from which to realize your self and life today as real beyond the real you have always thought of?

Here's an interesting question to consider, "If you believe in life between lives, what life do you believe in? ...can you describe that?"

Remember, what you discover in life ...and the nature of what you discover, including your promiseself and your past, is determined by the minding, as beliefs and thoughts, you set out to discover with, ...therefore, ask yourself, "What is the bridge or connection between concepts and sense perceptions? ...between infinite mind and youminding ...or thinking?" The bridge is constructed of beliefs, which, by the way, are far, far stronger and more expansive than "knowings". Actually, ideas, concepts, and beliefs take on a life of their own to be realized in any way possible ...unless inhibited by opposing ideas, concepts, and beliefs. How are you opposing most of what you declare you truly desire?

Now, consider that you in all regards~as a promisebeing, as a peregrinator or spacetime traveler, and as an individual in need of a purpose and a real past~are an idea•concept•belief, ...therefore, unless you oppose yourself with language, you will realize that you are fully realized ...and not a "work in progress".

Through all of this, if you can understand your showing the universe how it can work ...instead of merely observing or struggling to discover how the universe works, ...if you can understand your showing how greatness and fineness can work ...instead of struggling to discover how they work, ...and if you can understand your showing how intimacy can work ...instead of struggling to discover how intimacy works, then you can understand your showing how your promiseself can work ...instead of struggling to discover your promiseself.

You are greater than you ever imagined!
